IN FAVOR OF MARRIAGE. - Powers, the sculptor, writing to a friend of what some people call the folly of marrying without the means to support a family, expresses frankly his own fears when he found himself in this very position; but, he adds with characteristic candor, "to tell you the truth, however, the family and the poverty have done more to support me, than I have to support them. They have compelled me to make exertions that I hardly thought myself capable of, and often, when on the eve of despairing, they have forced me, like a coward in a corner, to fight like a hero, not for myself, but my wife and little ones. I have now as much work to do as I can execute, unless I can find some more assistance in the marble; and I have a prospect of further commissions."

The truth as expressed above by the gifted sculptor is like a similar remark we heard made long since by a gentleman of Boston, who tried matrimony in the same way, and found afterwards that the loose change in his pocket which he had before squandered in " foolish notions "-young men's whims-as he called them, was enough to support a prudent wife, who, by a well-regulated economy had proved a fortune in herself, and had saved a snug sum of money for her towards a proper ambition and to a genteel economy," reduction on each, but we can state on the very best once careless husband.
